Teaching The World

Information is of little value until you need it. Generally you are not interested in information until you feel a need for it. Then, for some things, it's too late to try to get prepared.

I think "end of life" issues fall into that category. Maybe more than any other topic. Most people find talking about death and dying unpleasant at best. Then, when we're forced to face it, we're unprepared and terrified. But it doesn't have to be that way. Death is a natural thing. It's as natural as birth. As Christians, it's graduation day. Homecoming day. It's the day we've lived our whole life for. We're crossing the finish line. It's the door to unfettered freedom and joy.

Sometimes we may know that the door is opening. While we may have made peace with death itself, dying can be hard. It was for Jesus. So that's ok.

As I write this, my step-father is evidently approaching that door (obviously, only the Lord knows. He's survived several things that have amazed us all). He had a heart attack and a stroke. He's ready... even anticipating it. He and my mother have been discussing this scenario for a long time. They've made agreements about it. So last night- actually in the pre-dawn hours of today- he quietly asked her if it was ok if he "let go." A loving, unselfish request. She tearfully replied, "Of course it is; I'll be alright."

Being prepared to die... and to accept the death of our loved ones is, by far, the greatest achievement in life. Christians teach the world how to live... and how to die.

- Ken Stegall

P.S. While I was writing this, I received a text saying that he was sitting up in a chair eating! There's no doubt about who's in control!

Announcements

Sue Dunn (mother of Jane Ann Fleming) is doing well enough to go to her home in Channelview. Her sister has come from Tennessee to stay with her. If you would like to send her letters, her address is P.O. Box 1193 Channelview, TX 77530

Please keep the following individuals in your prayers as they prepare to leave for Ethiopia July 22 - Aug 5th, Brice Caldwell, Kim Province, Carissa Holland, Joanie Roberts, Rusty Holland, Kaitlyn Reaves, Renee Cloud and Alma Mynhier.
