CRITICISM IS NOT AN ANSWER

There are lots of folks who are not very helpful when you're dealing with a problem. They tell you "how things ought to be." And they're really self-righteous about it—as if they just solved the problem. And I think they feel like they did. Their answer is, "This is how it's supposed to be."

They have plenty of criticism for everyone involved.

To all you critics out there—"News Flash!—Criticism is Not an Answer!" At very best, it points out the problem.

I'll listen to your criticism if you're willing to help solve the problem—with something more than what we/you/they are supposed to do!

But if all you have to offer is your philosophy about how sad and sorry things are, I'm better off without your help! I echo Job's sentiments when he said to his philosophical, self-righteous friends, "Doubtless you are the people, and wisdom will die with you! But I have a mind as well as you; I am not inferior to you. Who does not know all these things?"

I know how things are supposed to be. You haven't helped anything or anyone when you keep running around talking about the problem. You're just becoming part of the problem.

My car is broken down, holding up traffic. I'm trying to get it started. I've got a problem. I KNOW I've got a problem. You blowing your horn and yelling about how I'm inconveniencing you and everyone else doesn't help solve the problem. How about either helping me get the car started or help me push it off the street? Then I'll join you in talking about what a piece of sorry junk it is! But if you don't want to help, please don't offer your criticism as if it's a solution.

-Ken Stegall
